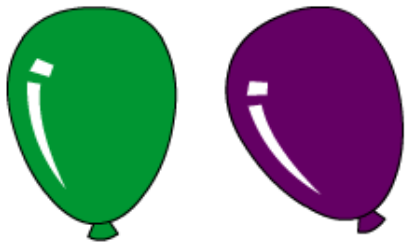
birthday Left Right Game



It was my birthday, and even though it fell RIGHT on a Sunday, I had so much homework LEFT to do. I didn't have any plans with friends, and it seemed no one remembered the RIGHT date. I LEFT my bed in the morning, and my family was sitting RIGHT in the living room, but no one LEFT a word about my birthday. I LEFT them RIGHT there and went back to my room to study what I had LEFT.

After a few hours, I heard some noise from the RIGHT... or was it the LEFT? I couldn't tell. My books were scattered everywhere ,some to my LEFT, some to my RIGHT. My pencil rolled LEFT, my eraser bounced RIGHT, and every time I tried to grab one, another flew LEFT or RIGHT.

In the afternoon, I went downstairs again. The living room was empty, There was no one on the LEFT or the RIGHT. I ate some LEFTovers, came back RIGHT to my room, and checked my phone. No one had LEFT a single message. I sighed, put my head down, and returned to the homework pile I had LEFT half-solved to my LEFT, while my notebook lay open to the RIGHT.

RIGHT then, I heard my mom calling my name. I went downstairs again, and the whole house was LEFT dark. Then, POP! A balloon exploded somewhere to the LEFT. I heard a loud "Surprise!" coming from the RIGHT. I saw familiar faces everywhere. My friends were on the LEFT, my family on the RIGHT. Balloons floated LEFT and RIGHT. Streamers swung from LEFT to RIGHT. Even the dog ran LEFT, then RIGHT.

The table on the LEFTwas stacked with gifts. The table on the RIGHT was piled high with cake, snacks, and party hats.

Someone grabbed a party horn to my LEFT, another grabbed a streamer to my RIGHT, and suddenly everyone was running LEFT and RIGHT across the room.

RIGHT then, I saw the face of my Math teacher, Mr. WRIGHT, among the crowd. Who had invited him? He was frowning RIGHTat me. "Have you finished the homework?" he asked, "or have you LEFT it just to join the fun?"

I froze, right there, mumbling excuses. Then he burst into laughter and said, "I know you'll complete it after the party, RIGHT? Enjoy it for now."

I joined his laughter RIGHT there. He LEFT to bring my gift from his car and I turned to the LEFT to join my friends. I was happy that no one had forgotten my birthday, and that made everything feel just RIGHT.

www.MyPartyGames.com